Module 3: Handling Difficult Customer Situations

In your role as a customer service officer, you will encounter situations where customers are frustrated or confused. This module provides guidance on how to handle these interactions professionally.

Example Scenario

A customer (let's call her 'Customer A') visits the branch complaining that a fee was charged without her knowledge. As the service officer, you should: (1) listen actively, (2) apologize for the confusion, (3) review the account (with her permission), (4) escalate to manager if needed.

Note: Never access a customer's account without their explicit consent and a valid service reason. This is a CBE regulatory requirement.
